

Human Trafficking and Slavery

Are the world's nations doing enough to stamp it out?

From the villages of Sudan to the factories, sweatshops and brothels of India and South Asia, slavery and human trafficking still flourish. Some 27 million people worldwide are held in some form of slavery, forced prostitution or bonded labor. Some humanitarian groups buy captives' freedom, but critics say that only encourages slave traders to seize more victims. Meanwhile, nearly a million people are forcibly trafficked across international borders annually and held in captivity. Even in the United States, thousands of women and children from overseas are forced to become sex workers. Congress recently strengthened the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, but critics say it is still not tough enough, and that certain U.S. allies that harbor traffickers are treated with "kid gloves" for political reasons.

Abducted from her village in southern Sudan when she was 6 years old, Akuac Malong was enslaved in northern Sudan until she was freed at age 13.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

THE ISSUES .....	275
BACKGROUND .....	282
CHRONOLOGY .....	283
CURRENT SITUATION .....	287
AT ISSUE .....	289
OUTLOOK .....	291
BIBLIOGRAPHY .....	293
THE NEXT STEP .....	294

The CQ Researcher • March 26, 2004 • www.theqcresearcher.com
Volume 14, Number 12 • Pages 273-296

RECIPIENT OF SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL JOURNALISTS AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE ♦ AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION SILVER GAVEL AWARD

THE ISSUES

- 275 • Does buying slaves in order to free them solve the problem?
• Is the Trafficking Victims Protection Act tough enough?
• Should most forms of child labor be eliminated?

BACKGROUND

- 282 Ancient Practice
Slavery was an accepted part of life in ancient times.
- 285 Slavery Goes Global
The Europeans spread slavery to the New World.
- 286 Outlawing Slavery
The movement began in the early 1800s in Europe.

CURRENT SITUATION

- 287 Human Trafficking
Traffickers lure victims with promises of good jobs overseas.
- 290 Slavery and Forced Labor
Up to 20 million people are held in bonded labor in South Asia.

OUTLOOK

- 291 Impact of Globalization
As living standards improve, attracting victims becomes more difficult.

SIDEBARS AND GRAPHICS

- 276 Where Human Trafficking Occurs
The most extensive traffic is in South Asia, Africa and Eastern Europe.
- 279 Fighting the Traffickers
The U.S. says 15 countries do little to halt trafficking.
- 280 Economic Benefits Cited for Ending Child Labor
Global income could rise by $4.3 trillion over 20 years.
- 283 Chronology
Key events since 1821.
- 286 Nearly 200 Million Young Children Must Work
The total includes a quarter of the children in sub-Saharan Africa.
- 289 At Issue
Is the Trafficking Victims Protection Act tough enough?
- 292 For More Information
Organizations to contact.
- 293 Bibliography
Selected sources used.
- 294 The Next Step
Additional articles.
- 295 Citing *The CQ Researcher
Sample bibliography formats.

March 26, 2004
Volume 14, No. 12

MANAGING EDITOR: Thomas J. Colin

ASSISTANT MANAGING EDITOR: Kathy Koch

ASSOCIATE EDITOR: Kenneth Jost

STAFF WRITERS: Mary H. Cooper,
David Masci, William Triplett

CONTRIBUTING WRITERS: Sarah Glazer,
David Hatch, David Hosansky,
Patrick Marshall, Tom Price, Jane Tanner

DESIGN/PRODUCTION EDITOR: Olu B. Davis

ASSISTANT EDITOR: Kenneth Lukas

A Division of Congressional Quarterly Inc.

SENIOR VICE PRESIDENT/GENERAL MANAGER:
John A. Jenkins

DIRECTOR, LIBRARY PUBLISHING: Kathryn C. Suárez

DIRECTOR, EDITORIAL OPERATIONS:
Ann Davies

CIRCULATION MANAGER: Nina Tristani

CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.

CHAIRMAN: Andrew Barnes

VICE CHAIRMAN: Andrew P. Corty

PRESIDENT AND PUBLISHER: Robert W. Merry

Copyright © 2004 CQ Press, a division of Congressional Quarterly Inc. (CQ). CQ reserves all copyright and other rights herein, unless previously specified in writing. No part of this publication may be reproduced electronically or otherwise, without prior written permission. Unauthorized reproduction or transmission of CQ copyrighted material is a violation of federal law carrying civil fines of up to $100,000.

The CQ Researcher (ISSN 1056-2036) is printed on acid-free paper. Published weekly, except Jan. 2, April 9, July 2, July 9, Aug. 6, Aug. 13, Nov. 26 and Dec. 31, by CQ Press, a division of Congressional Quarterly Inc. Annual subscription rates for libraries, businesses and government start at $625. Single issues are available for $10. Quantity discounts apply to orders over 10. Additional rates furnished upon request. Periodicals postage paid at Washington, D.C., and additional mailing offices. POSTMASTER: Send address changes to The CQ Researcher, 1255 22nd St., N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20037.

Cover: Akuac Malong, a 13-year-old Dinka girl from southern Sudan, was freed after being enslaved for seven years by Arab Muslims in northern Sudan. Tens of thousands of black Christians and followers of tribal religions are thought to be held captive in Sudan. (AP Photo/Jean-Marc Bouju)

Human Trafficking and Slavery

BY DAVID MASCI

THE ISSUES

One morning in May, 7-year-old Francis Bok walked to the market in Nymlal, Sudan, to sell some eggs and peanuts. The farmer's son had made the same trip many times before.

"I was living a very good life with my family," he recalls today. "I was a happy child."

But his happy life ended that day in 1986. Arab raiders from northern Sudan swept into the village, sowing death and destruction. "They came on horses and camels and running on foot, firing machine guns and killing people everywhere," he says. His entire family — mother, father and two sisters — died in the attack.

The raiders grabbed Francis and several other children, lashed them to donkeys and carried them north for two days. Then the children were parceled out to their captors. Francis went to a man named Giema Abdullah.

For the next 10 years, the boy tended his "owner's" goats and cattle. He slept with the animals, never had a day off and was rarely fed properly.

"He treated me like an animal, he even called me an animal, and he beat me," Francis says. "There was no joy. Even when I remembered my happy life before, it only made me sad."

In 1996, Francis escaped to Sudan's capital, Khartoum; then he made his way to Cairo, Egypt, and eventually in 2000 to the United States, which admitted him as a refugee.

As all American students learn, the Civil War ended slavery in the United States in 1865. Internationally, the practice was banned by several agreements and treaties, beginning in 1926 with

Tearful Eastern European women comfort each other after being freed in 2000 from an American-owned hotel in Phnom Penh, Cambodia, where they were forced to have sex with businessmen and government officials. Traffickers in Eastern Europe often lure young women into bondage by advertising phony jobs abroad for nannies, models or actresses.

AFP Photo/Philippe Lopez

the Slavery Convention of the League of Nations. But for tens of millions of people around the world, including millions of children like Francis, slavery never ended. An estimated 27 million people currently are held in some form of bondage, according to anti-slavery groups like Free the Slaves.<sup>1</sup> From the villages of Sudan and Mauritania in Africa to the factories, sweatshops and brothels of South Asia, slavery in its rawest, cruelest form is very much alive in the 21st century.

Many of those in bondage were kidnapped, like Francis. Others go voluntarily to different countries, thinking they are heading for a better life, only to be forced into a nightmare of prostitution or hard labor. Many more work as bonded laborers, tied to lifetime servitude because their father or grandfather borrowed money they couldn't repay.

Trafficking people across international borders has become a $12-billion-a-year global industry that touches virtually every country. The U.S. government estimates that between 800,000 and 900,000 people are trafficked internationally every year, many of them women and children, transported as sex workers.<sup>2</sup> The total includes up to 20,000 people forcibly trafficked into the United States annually, according to the Central Intelligence Agency.<sup>3</sup> (See sidebar, p. 284.)

Lyudmilla's story is typical. Like many desperately poor young women, the single mother of three from the former Soviet republic of Moldova responded to an advertisement promising work in Italy. Instead she was taken to a brothel in Macedonia, where she spent two horrific years in sexual slavery before escaping in 2002.<sup>4</sup>

Venecija, a Bulgarian, also ended up in a Macedonian brothel. "We were so tired we couldn't get out of bed," she recalled. "But [we had to] put on makeup and meet customers," she said after escaping. Those who refused were beaten until they "changed their minds."<sup>5</sup>

Traffickers control their victims through a variety of coercive means. In addition to rape and beatings, they keep their passports, leaving them with few options if they do manage to escape.

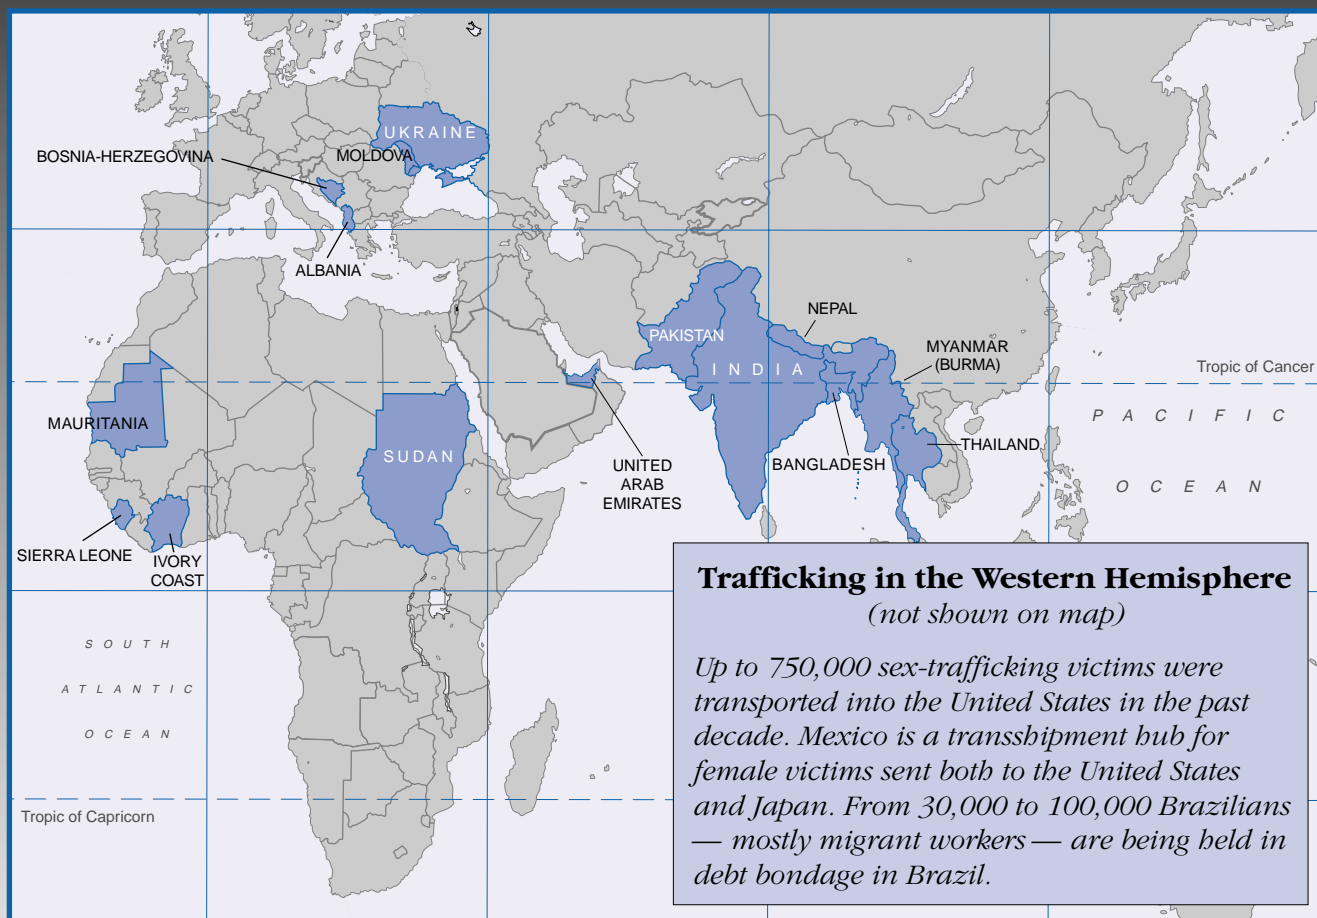

And the violence can follow those who do get away. Mercy, a young West African woman trafficked to Italy, escaped her tormentors only to see her sister killed in retribution after Mercy told human rights groups about her experience.<sup>6</sup>

The vast majority of slaves and victims of human trafficking come from the poorest parts of Africa, Asia, Latin America and Eastern Europe, where, smooth-talking traffickers often easily

HUMAN TRAFFICKING AND SLAVERY

Where Human Trafficking Occurs

Human trafficking and slavery take place in virtually every country in the world, but the U.N. and other reliable sources say the most extensive trafficking occurs in the countries below (listed at right).

Sources: Protection Project at Johns Hopkins University, U.S. State Department, Human Rights Watch, International Labour Organization, American Anti-Slavery Group deceive desperate victims or their parents into believing that they are being offered a “better life.”

“Being poor doesn’t make you a slave, but it does make you vulnerable to being a slave,” says Peggy Callahan, a spokeswoman for Free the Slaves, based in Washington, D.C.

Some Christian groups and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) have tried to buy slaves out of bondage, particularly in Sudan, where two decades of civil war have stoked the slave trade. But many humanitarian groups argue that so-called slave redemption merely increases the demand for slaves.

International efforts to fight slavery and trafficking have increased dramatically over the last 10 years, with the United States playing a leading role. President Bush dramatized America’s commitment in an address to the U.N. General Assembly on Sept. 23, 2003. The president had been expected to focus on security issues in the Middle East, but he devoted a substantial portion of his remarks to urging the international community to do more to fight trafficking.

“There is a special evil in the abuse and exploitation of the most innocent and vulnerable,” Bush said.

Europe
Albania	Up to 90 percent of the girls in rural areas don't go to school for fear of being abducted and sold into sexual servitude.
Bosnia and Herzegovina	A quarter of the women working in nightclubs claim they were forced into prostitution. The U.N. police task force is suspected of covering up its involvement in the sex trade.
Moldova	Up to 80 percent of the women trafficked as prostitutes in Western Europe may be Moldovans.
Ukraine	Up to 400,000 Ukrainian women have been trafficked for sexual exploitation in the past decade, Ukraine says. Ukrainian sex slaves can fetch up to $25,000 in Israel.
Africa
Ivory Coast	A girl can allegedly be bought as a slave in Abidjan for about $7; a shipment of 10 children from Mali for work on the cocoa plantations costs about $420.
Mauritania	Light-skinned Arab Berbers today are thought to exploit hundreds of thousands of black African slaves. Slave raids in the 13th century began systemic slavery in Mauritania.
Sudan	Muslim tribesmen from northern Sudan still stage slave raids on non-Muslim Dinka peoples in the south, taking thousands of women and children.
Asia
Bangladesh	An estimated 25,000 women and children are trafficked annually from Bangladesh.
India	Parents have sold an estimated 15 million children into bonded labor in return for meager loans from moneylenders.
Myanmar	The ruling military junta coerces minorities into forced labor in factories that benefit the regime and foreign corporations.
Nepal	A major source of women trafficked into Indian brothels; in addition, an estimated 75,000 people are trapped as bonded laborers in Nepal.
Pakistan	Millions of Pakistanis, often members of religious minorities, are forced to work as brick makers or in the fields of feudal landowners.
Thailand	Children sold by their parents make up a significant percentage of prostitutes in Thailand, which is a prime destination for pedophile sex tourists.
United Arab Emirates	Many women trafficked from the former Soviet Union end up in the UAE.

"Nearly two centuries after the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade, and more than a century after slavery was officially ended in its last strongholds, the trade in human beings for any purpose must not be allowed to thrive." <sup>7</sup>

The cornerstone of recent American anti-trafficking efforts is the 2000 Trafficking Victims Protection Act, which mandates the cutoff of most non-humanitarian U.S. aid for any nation deemed not trying hard enough to address the problem.

"The act breaks new ground because it actually tries to bring about changes in other countries," says Wendy Young, director of external relations for the Women's Commission for Refugee Women and Children in New York City.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING AND SLAVERY

"It's making a difference in countries all over the world," agrees Rep. Christopher H. Smith, R-N.J., one of the law's authors.

But critics contend the act is too weak to force real behavior changes. "It's very easy for countries to avoid sanctions just by taking a few largely meaningless actions," says Katherine Chon, co-director of the Polaris Project, an anti-trafficking advocacy group in Washington. She also accuses the administration of giving a pass to important allies, like Saudi Arabia, regardless of what they do to ameliorate their forced-labor practices.

All sides agree that many countries where trafficking occurs have a long way to go before they attain the level of economic, legal and political maturity needed to entirely eliminate the practice. "I don't think people realize just how desperately poor and chaotic many countries are today," says Linda Beher, a spokeswoman for the New York City-based United Methodist Committee On Relief, which assists trafficking victims.

A tragic consequence of this poverty is child labor, which many experts see as a cousin to slavery. In the developing world today, nearly 200 million children ages 5-14 are put to work to help support their families, according to the International Labour Organization (ILO). Almost half are under age 12, and more than 20 million are engaged in highly hazardous work, such as tanning leather or weaving rugs, exposing them to unhealthy chemicals or airborne pollutants.<sup>8</sup>

Some humanitarian aid workers describe much child labor as inherently coercive, because young children often have no choice.

The ILO argues that eliminating child labor and sending children to school would ultimately benefit nations with child laborers by raising income levels. (See graph, p. 280.) But some economists counter that putting even a fraction of the working children in school would be prohibitively expensive.

As experts debate resolving what has been called one of the greatest

The Sudanese government has done virtually nothing to stop the practice and has even encouraged it as a means of prosecuting the war against the rebellious south, according to the U.S. State Department's 2003 "Trafficking in Persons Report."

Since 1995, Christian Solidarity International (CSI) and other slave-redemption groups operating in Sudan say they have purchased the freedom of more than 60,000 people by providing money for local Sudanese to buy slaves and then free them.<sup>9</sup>

"Women and children are freed from the terrible abuse, the rape, the beatings, the forcible conversions [to Islam] — all of the horrors that are an inherent part of slavery in Sudan," said John Eibner, director of CSI's redemption program.<sup>10</sup>

Halfway around the world, New York Times columnist Nicholas D. Kristof had his own brush with slave redemption when he traveled to Cambodia and freed two female sex slaves. "I woke up her brothel's owner at dawn," he wrote of his efforts to purchase one of the prostitutes, "handed over $150, brushed off demands for interest on the debt and got a receipt for $150 for buying a girl's freedom. Then Srey Neth and I fled before the brothel's owner was even out of bed."<sup>11</sup>

While experts concede that slave redeemers are well-intentioned, many contend the practice actually does more harm than good. "When you have people running around buying up slaves, you help create market demand for more slaves," says Jim Jacobson, president of Christian Freedom International, a relief group in Front Royal, Va., that stopped its slave-

John Eibner of Christian Solidarity International pays an Arab trader to free 132 slaves in Madbol, northern Sudan, in 1997. Critics of slave-redemption say it only encourages more slave-taking, but supporters say that not trying to free slaves would be unconscionable.

AP Photo/Jean-Marc Bouju

humanitarian problems of the 21st century, here are some of the questions they are asking:

Does buying slaves in order to free them solve the problem?

In recent years, would-be Samaritans — from Christian missionaries to famous rock musicians — have worked to free slaves in Africa. Although slave trading occurs in many countries, the rescue efforts largely have focused on war-torn Sudan, where Muslim raiders from the north have enslaved hundreds of thousands of Christian and animist tribesmen in the south.

repatriation efforts five years ago. "It's really just simple economics."

Kevin Bales, author of Disposable People: New Slavery in the Global Economy and president of Free the Slaves, agrees. "This is like paying a burglar to redeem the television set he just stole," says Bales, a noted expert on contemporary slavery. "It's better to find other ways to free people, like going to the police or taking them out of bondage by force."

Indeed, Jacobson says, redemption only puts more money in the pockets of unscrupulous and often violent slave traders. "These people end up taking the money and buying more guns and hiring more thugs to go out and take more slaves," he says.

In addition, the critics say, many "slaves" pretend to be in bondage to defraud Westerners. "If you talk to aid workers in these places, you'll find that [bogus slave traders] are literally picking up [already free] people from across town and 'selling' them an hour later," Free the Slaves' Callahan says.

"So much of it is a huge scam operation," agrees Jacobson. "A lot of these people aren't really slaves."

But supporters of redemption say it would be unconscionable not to attempt to free slaves, even if slavers will go out searching for new victims. "Slaves are treated so badly, especially the women and children, who have been beaten and raped," says William Saunders, human rights counsel for the Family Research Council, a conservative social-policy group, and co-founder of the Bishop Gassis Sudan Relief Fund, both in Washington. "How can you not try to free these people?"

Saunders and others also contend that slave buyers take steps to avoid creating a bigger market for slaves. "In the Sudan, they use the local currency, because a dollar or a [British] pound is the sort of powerful magnet that might give people incentives to take more slaves or present non-slaves," he says.

In addition, redemption supporters

Fighting the Traffickers

The 2000 Trafficking Victims Protection Act requires the State Department to report each year on global efforts to end human trafficking. Last year, 15 countries were placed in Tier 3, for those deemed to be doing little or nothing against trafficking. Countries in Tier 3 for three years in a row can lose all U.S. non-humanitarian aid. Tier 1 countries are considered to be actively fighting trafficking. Seventy-five countries are in Tier 2, indicating they are making some efforts against trafficking.

State Department Anti-Trafficking Ratings

Tier 1 — Actively Fighting Trafficking

Austria	Hong Kong	Poland
Belgium	Italy	Portugal
Benin	South Korea	Spain
Colombia	Lithuania	Sweden
Czech Republic	Macedonia	Switzerland
Denmark	Mauritius	Taiwan
France	Morocco	United Arab Emirates
Germany	The Netherlands	United Kingdom
Ghana

Tier 3 — Doing Little or Nothing

Belize	Georgia	North Korea
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Greece	Sudan
Myanmar	Haiti	Suriname
Cuba	Kazakhstan	Turkey
Dominican Republic	Liberia	Uzbekistan

Source: "2003 Trafficking in Persons Report," Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons, Department of State, June 2003

say, they usually cap what they will pay per person — typically $50. "There's a real effort to ensure that we don't inflate the value of slaves," says Tommy Ray Calvert, chief of external operations for the Boston-based American Anti-Slavery Group (AASG).

Calvert contends that the redemptions have helped decrease slave raids in Sudan. The redemptions "brought world attention to the issue and forced our government and others to start pressuring the Sudanese to stop this evil practice," he says.

Moreover, Saunders refutes the charge that redeemers simply set people free without trying to ensure that they are true slaves. "They try to repatriate these people directly to their villages," Saunders says. "They don't just buy their freedom and let them go."

But the critics remain dubious. "It's so hard to get anywhere in Sudan that there is no way that they could

Economic Benefits Cited for Ending Child Labor

Banning child labor and educating all children would raise the world's total income by 22 percent, or $4.3 trillion, over 20 years, according to the International Labour Organization (ILO). The principal benefit would be the economic boost that most countries would experience if all children were educated through lower secondary school, plus substantial but less dramatic health benefits. The ILO analysis assumes countries that banned child labor would pay poor parents for their children's lost wages, something critics say is unrealistically expensive.

Net Economic Benefits of Eliminating Child Labor

(as a percentage of annual gross national income)

* Transitional countries — such as Taiwan, Singapore and Malaysia — are no longer considered “developing” but not yet classified as fully industrialized.

Source: “Investing in Every Child,” International Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour, International Labour Office, December 2003

actually follow all of these people back to their home villages,” Jacobson says. “It would take weeks or months.”

Moreover, he says, “they don’t have any idea whether the people they’ve freed have been coached or whether the village they’re going to is really their village. It’s simply impossible to know.”

Is the Trafficking Victims Protection Act tough enough?

The $12 billion human-trafficking industry is now the world’s third-largest illegal business, surpassing every other criminal enterprise except the drug and arms trades, according to the United Nations.<sup>12</sup>

In October 2000, the U.S. government zeroed in on the problem, enacting the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA), which targets the illegal trade both at home and abroad.<sup>13</sup> The law established the State Department’s Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons, which issues an annual report on what countries are doing to end trafficking.

The report uses a three-tiered system to rank countries — from states that actively fight trafficking (Tier 1) to those doing little (Tier 3). Countries classified as Tier 3 for three years in a row are subject to a cut-off of non-humanitarian U.S. aid. (See sidebar, p. 284.)

On the domestic side, the law allows U.S. authorities to charge alleged traffickers in the United States under the tough federal anti-racketeering law (RICO). According to the State Department, 111 persons have been charged with trafficking in the first three years since the law was enacted, a threefold increase over the three-year period before the TVPA went into effect.<sup>14</sup>

The law also makes it easier for trafficked victims to acquire refugee status in the United States and allows them to sue their victimizers for damages in civil court.

President Bill Clinton signed the bill into law on Oct. 28, 2000, saying it would provide “important new tools and resources to combat the worldwide scourge of trafficking.”

Today, however, critics argue that while the act is “a step in the right direction,” it is ultimately not tough enough to shake up the industry, especially internationally. “Of course, it’s good that we have it, but frankly we have an awfully long way to go,” says the Polaris Project’s Chon.

She especially criticizes provisions requiring countries to fight trafficking or face American penalties. “It’s just not strong enough because it allows countries to avoid sanctions with just superficial acts,” she says.

For example, she says, Japan responded to U.S. pressure to curtail sex trafficking by “giving Cambodia a few million dollars in anti-trafficking aid and holding a symposium on trafficking.” But the Japanese did “not really do anything to substantially crack down on their own widespread problem.”

Yet, she adds, the United States has said Japan has been tackling trafficking enough to avoid a Tier 3 classification and the prospect of sanctions. “Japan is an important ally,” she says. “Need I say more?”

Other critics allege that certain countries are treated with “kid gloves” for political reasons. “States like Saudi Arabia and countries from the former Soviet Union, which are important American allies, have been pushed up to Tier 2 because stopping slavery isn’t the priority [in U.S. foreign relations] it should be,” says Calvert of the AASG.

Calvert is especially incensed that the government failed to classify Mauritania, on Africa's north-western coast, in Tier 3, calling it instead a "special case" because of insufficient information to make an accurate determination. "This is a country with literally hundreds of thousands of people in chattel slavery and everyone knows it, and yet it gets a pass," he says. "That is just unbelievable to me."

But supporters contend that the TVPA, while not perfect, helps move problem countries in the right direction. "It's important to have a tool we can use to push foreign governments to act against this terrible abuse of human dignity, and this law does that," says Beher, of the United Methodist Committee On Relief.

In Japan, for instance, the law has helped make the fight against trafficking more effective, raising public awareness of the problem dramatically as a result of the debate over its ranking in the TVPA, supporters add.

"When Japan was dropped from Tier 1 to Tier 2, it was very embarrassing for them, and all of a sudden you saw this real public debate about the trafficking issue — which is a huge problem there," says Diana Pinata, a spokeswoman for Vital Voices, a global woman's advocacy group in Washington. "If nothing else, the [annual State Department trafficking] report and the threat of sanctions keeps the issue in the spotlight in these countries, and that's very positive."

Besides Japan, several other countries, including Russia, Saudi Arabia and Indonesia, have dramatically improved their anti-trafficking efforts as a result

Rescuers return 14 children to their native Bangladesh after they were abducted to India. Children in poor countries sometimes are sold by their parents or kidnapped by traffickers and forced to work without pay, frequently in hazardous conditions.

AFP Photo

of pressure brought to bear by the TVPA, says John Miller, director of the Office to Combat Trafficking. "We've seen real efforts all over the world," he says. "Some have been more substantial than others, but there already has been a lot of progress."

Moreover, Miller rejects the charge of political favoritism. "Look at the Tier 3 list, and you'll see that there are U.S. allies like Greece and Turkey there," he says. "These decisions aren't being made on the basis of politics."

Pinata agrees. "When we speak to NGO workers and others in the field working on this issue, we get the sense that the trafficking report's assessment of these countries is essentially correct," she says.

Should most forms of child labor be eliminated?

Zara Cigay, 12, and her two younger brothers don't go to school. Instead, they help their parents and extended family, migrant farm workers who pick cotton and other crops in southern Turkey.

"Wherever there is a job, we do it," said Huseyin Cigay, Zara's great-uncle. "The children work with us everywhere." <sup>15</sup>

More than 250 million children around the world between the ages of 5 and 17 are working, according to the ILO. Most are in developing countries in Africa and Asia, and nearly half work full time like Zara and her brothers. <sup>16</sup>

Many do strenuous farm labor. In cities, they do everything from retailing and domestic service to manufacturing and construction. In nations beset by civil wars, thousands of children have been forced to fight in rebel armies. <sup>17</sup>

A large portion of child labor is coerced, according to child-welfare experts. Children are often sold by their parents or kidnapped and forced to work virtually as slaves for no pay. In India, children are literally tied to weaving looms so that they cannot run away.

Labor experts uniformly condemn forced and bonded labor. But on the question of child labor in general, the experts are split over whether the practice should be condoned under certain circumstances.

Human rights advocates and others point to the ILO's 1999 Worst Forms of Child Labor Convention, which prohibits all full-time work and any work by children under 12 but sanctions part-time, non-hazardous labor for teenagers that does not interfere with their social development. <sup>18</sup>

"Under international law, children have a right to a basic education," says Karin Landgren, chief of child protection at the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). "Work should never interfere with this."

In addition, Landgren says, “They need to have time to play and participate freely in their country’s cultural and social life. This is vitally important if they are to develop into healthy adults.”

A recent ILO report says that child labor negatively impacts all levels of society. “Child labor perpetuates poverty, because when children don’t have an education and a real chance to develop to their fullest potential, they are mortgaging their future,” says Frans Roselaers, director of the organization’s international program on the elimination of child labor and author of the report.

Child labor also costs societies economically by producing uneducated adult workers, Roselaers says. “Countries with a lot of child workers are stunting their economic growth,” he says, “because they will only end up producing an army of weak and tired workers with no skills.”

But some economists counter that child labor, even full-time work, is often a necessity in developing countries. “In an ideal world, children would spend all of their time at school and at play, but poor people in poor countries don’t have the kind of options that we in rich countries do,” says Ian Vasquez, director of the Project on Global Economic Liberty at the Cato Institute, a libertarian think tank. “When you begin to restrict children’s options for work, you can end up hurting children and their families.”

Indeed, child labor often is the only thing that stands between survival and starvation, some experts say. “No parents want their child to work, but child labor helps families get by,” says Deepak Lal, a professor of international-development studies at the University of California, Los Angeles. “When a country’s per capita income rises to about $3,000 or $4,000, child labor usually fades away.”

In addition, Lal says, working children often end up with a better education than those who don’t work. “The public education system is a failure in many parts of the developing world and really doesn’t offer much to the children who attend school,” he says. “But if a child works and his family earns enough to send him or his siblings to private school, that can really pay off.”

Finally, Vasquez argues that outlawing child labor would only drive the problem underground, where there is no government oversight, and abuses would increase. “In Bangladesh, girls were prevented from continuing to work in textile plants, so many ended up as prostitutes,” he says. “People need to make money, and if you deny them one route, they’ll take another.”

But Roselaers counters that child workers would not be driven to more dangerous and demeaning jobs if the international community eased the transition from work to school. In the case of Bangladesh, he says, the threat of a consumer boycott by Western countries prompted textile factory owners to fire their child employees.

“The factory owners panicked and fired the kids, and so, yes, there were problems,” he says. “But when groups like the ILO and UNICEF came in, we started offering the parents stipends to make up for the lost income and easing the children’s transition from work to school.”

Some 1 million children are now being helped to make the transition from work to school, according to a recent ILO report.<sup>19</sup> In India, for instance, the ILO and the U.S. Department of Labor are spending $40 million this year to target 80,000 children working in hazardous jobs.<sup>20</sup>

Nonetheless, Lal says, such a program could only make a small dent in the problem. “You can’t give a stipend to each of the many millions of families that send their children to work,” he says. “There isn’t enough money to do this, so it’s not a realistic solution, just a palliative that make Westerners feel good about themselves.” ■

BACKGROUND

---

Ancient Practice

---

Slavery is as old as human civilization. All of the world’s great founding cultures, including those in Mesopotamia, China, Egypt and India, accepted slavery as a fact of life.<sup>21</sup> The practice also was common in sub-Saharan Africa and the Americas.

Neither the Bible nor the great thinkers of Greece and Rome took firm positions against slavery. Some, like the Greek philosopher Aristotle, vigorously defended it.

It was not until Enlightenment philosophers like John Locke and Voltaire established new definitions of human freedom and dignity in the 17th and 18th centuries, that large numbers of people started questioning the morality of keeping another person in bondage.

Ancient societies typically acquired slaves from outside their borders, usually through war or territorial conquest. Captives and conquered people often served as agricultural workers or domestic servants.

Slavery probably reached its zenith in ancient Greece and then Rome, where human trafficking became a huge and profitable industry. In many Greek cities, including powerful Athens and Sparta, as many as half the residents were slaves. In Rome, slavery was so widespread that even common people could afford to have one or two.<sup>22</sup>

Slaves in the ancient world often did more than just menial tasks. Some, especially in the Roman Empire, became physicians and poets. Others achieved great influence, managing estates or assisting powerful generals or politicians.

Continued on p. 284

Chronology

---

19th Century

After thousands of years, slavery is abolished in much of the world.

1821

Congress enacts the Missouri Compromise, specifying which new U.S. states will allow slavery.

1833

England outlaws slavery throughout its empire.

1839

The world's first international abolitionist group, Anti-slavery International, is founded in England.

1848

Slavery abolished in French colonies.

1863

President Abraham Lincoln issues Emancipation Proclamation.

December 1865

The 13th Amendment abolishes slavery.

1873

Spain ends slavery in Puerto Rico.

1888

Brazil outlaws slavery.

---

1900-1990 International treaties to halt slavery are adopted.

1919

International Labour Organization (ILO) is founded.

1926

League of Nations outlaws slavery.

1945

United Nations is founded.

1946

U.N. Children's Fund is established.

1948

U.N.'s Universal Declaration of Human Rights prohibits slavery.

1951

International Organization for Migration is founded to help migrants.

1956

Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery outlaws debt bondage, serfdom and other forced-labor practices.

1978

Human Rights Watch is founded.

1983

Sudan's civil war begins, pitting the Muslim north against the Christian and animist south, leading to slave raids in the south.

---

1990s The end of the Cold War and other geopolitical changes allow trafficking and slavery to expand.

1991

Collapse of the Soviet Union leads to a dramatic rise in trafficking in Eastern Europe.

1994

American Anti-Slavery Group is founded.

1995

Christian and non-governmental organizations begin redeeming slaves in Sudan.

June 1, 1999

ILO adopts the Worst Forms of Child Labor Convention.

2000-Present

United States and other countries renew efforts to fight slavery and trafficking.

March 2000

Free the Slaves is founded.

Oct. 28, 2000

President Bill Clinton signs the Trafficking Victims Protection Act.

Nov. 15, 2000

United Nations approves the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish the Trafficking in Persons.

Feb. 14, 2002

Polaris Project is founded to fight trafficking.

June 10, 2002

State Department's Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking releases its first "Trafficking in Persons Report."

March 11, 2003

Brazilian President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva unveils anti-slavery initiative.

Sept. 19, 2003

President Bush signs Trafficking Victims Protection Act Reauthorization.

Sept. 23, 2003

President Bush delivers a major anti-trafficking address at the U.N. General Assembly.

January 2004

U.N. launches year-long commemoration of anti-slavery movement.

Summer 2004

State Department's Fourth Annual "Trafficking in Persons Report" to be released.

Fighting Trafficking in the United States

Seven men were sent to prison on Jan. 29, 2004, for holding several Latin American women against their will in South Texas, forcing them to work without pay and raping them repeatedly.

The case was the latest in a series of sex-trafficking cases prosecuted under the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) of 2000, which established stiff penalties for human trafficking and provided mandatory restitution to victims.<sup>1</sup> In the last three years, the Justice Department has prosecuted 132 traffickers — three times the number charged in the three years before the law was enacted.<sup>2</sup>

Last year, Congress updated the law to make trafficking a racketeering offense and allow victims to sue their captors in U.S. courts.

“While we have made much progress in combating human trafficking . . . we have not yet eradicated modern-day slavery,” reauthorization sponsor Rep. Christopher H. Smith, R-N.J., said during consideration of the bill by the House International Relations Committee on July 23, 2003.

The Central Intelligence Agency estimates that between 18,000 and 20,000 people are trafficked into the United States each year.<sup>3</sup> Many are women — kidnapped or lured here with promises of marriage or work as nannies, models, waitresses, factory workers and exotic dancers. Once they arrive, they are stripped of their passports and forced to work as sex slaves, laborers or domestic servants until their smuggling or travel “debts” are repaid. The average victim is 20 years old.<sup>4</sup>

“They tell them they’ll make a lot of money, they’ll be free, they’ll have a beautiful life,” says Marisa B. Ugarte, executive director of the Bilateral Safety Corridor Coalition, a San Diego organization that assists trafficking victims in Mexico and the United States. “But once they are here, everything changes.”

Prior to passage of the TVPA, many of the victims were treated as criminals and subject to deportation. Today, they can apply to the Bureau of Citizen and Immigration Services for one of 5,000 “T” nonimmigrant visas available each year. The visas allow them to remain in the United States if they are assisting in the investigation or prosecution of traffickers. They may then apply for permanent residency if their removal would cause severe hardship.<sup>5</sup>

The Department of Homeland Security had received 721 T-status applications as of June 30, 2003: 301 were granted, 30 were denied and 390 are pending.<sup>6</sup>

Mohamed Mattar, co-director of the Protection Project, a human-rights research institute at Johns Hopkins University, said the visa program has been stymied by victims’ reluctance to go to law enforcement authorities for help.

This fear is fed by the fact that many police officers remain unaware of the TVPA and are more likely to arrest the victims than the perpetrators, says Donna M. Hughes, an authority on sex trafficking at the University of Rhode Island.

“We need to start treating [Johns] like the perpetrators they are, and not like lonely guys,” Hughes adds. “We need a renewal of ideas at the state and local level.”

Under the TVPA, alien trafficking victims who do come forward can receive federal benefits normally available to refugees.

Historically, most trafficked victims have come from Latin America and Southeast Asia, smuggled across the porous Mexican border by “coyotes” or escorted by “jockeys” pretending to be a boyfriend or cousin.<sup>7</sup> Since the early 1990s, however, there has been an influx of women from the former Soviet Union and Central and Eastern Europe, where trafficking rings recruit women with newspaper ads and billboards beckoning them to prosperous futures in the United States.

Undocumented migrant workers are also vulnerable to traffickers. On March 2, 2004, a federal district judge sentenced Flori-

Continued from p. 282

Great Roman thinkers like Pliny the Younger and Cicero urged masters to treat their slaves with kindness and even to let them “share your conversations, your deliberations and your company,” Cicero wrote.<sup>23</sup> Perhaps as a result, manumission, or the freeing of slaves by their masters, was commonplace, usually after many years of service.

Ultimately, however, Roman slavery was maintained by cruelty and violence, including the use of severe flogging and even crucifixion. Slave revolts, common in the first and second centuries B.C., were brutally suppressed.

The collapse of the western half of the Roman Empire in the 5th-century A.D. led to a new, more fragmented, power structure in Western Europe often centered around local warlords (knights) and the Catholic Church. The new order did not eliminate slavery, but in many areas slaves became serfs, or peasants tied to the local lord’s land and could not leave without his permission.<sup>24</sup>

In the East, meanwhile, a new force — Islam — was on the rise. For the Arabs who swept into the Mediterranean basin and the Near East beginning in the 7th century, traditional slavery was a way of life, just as it had been for the Romans. In the ensuing centuries, the Arabs brought millions of sub-Saharan Africans, Asians and Europeans to the slave markets for sale throughout the Middle East.

Meanwhile, slavery remained commonplace elsewhere. In North America, Indians along the Eastern seaboard and in the Pacific Northwest often enslaved members of other tribes taken in war. The more advanced indigenous civilizations to the south, like the Aztec and Mayans in what is now Mexico, and the Inca of Peru, also relied upon slaves. And on the Indian subcontinent, the strict Hindu caste system held tens of millions in virtual bondage.

da labor contractor Ramiro Ramos to 15 years in prison for holding migrant workers in servitude and forcing them to work in citrus groves until they had paid off their transportation debts.<sup>8</sup>

In some instances, diplomats and international civil servants bring domestic workers — often illiterate women from Africa, Asia and Latin America — into the United States legally, but then force them to work long hours for almost no pay. In one case, an Ethiopian maid for an International Monetary Fund staffer says she worked eight years for seven days a week, 15 hours a day for less than 3 cents an hour.<sup>9</sup>

Although the employer claimed the maid was his guest, he disappeared before a lawsuit filed by the maid, Yesheharg Teferre, could be prosecuted. “I was not their guest,” Teferre told a reporter. “I was their slave.”<sup>10</sup>

Foreign diplomats bring 3,800 domestic servants into the United States each year under special temporary work visas, which allow them only to work for the employer who sponsored them. The employer promises to abide by U.S. labor laws, but there is almost no oversight of the program, so the abuse of servants remains under law enforcement’s radar screen, human rights advocates say.<sup>11</sup>

But foreign nationals are not the only victims of domestic trafficking. Homeless and runaway American children also are preyed upon by pimps, who troll malls and clubs in search of teenagers they can “turn.” Typically, the pimps befriend the girls, ply them with drugs and then use their addiction to turn them into prostitutes.<sup>12</sup>

There are between 100,000 and 300,000 such citizen victims in the United States, though they’re more often overlooked by police, says Derek Ellerman, co-founder of the Polaris Project, a grass-roots anti-trafficking organization. “There is a glaring bias in enforcement” of the Mann Act, which bans the transport of children and adults across state lines for prostitution, Ellerman says. “U.S. kids who are being targeted [by traffickers] just are not being protected.”

For the traffickers — many of them members of gangs or loosely linked criminal networks — trafficking is much more lucrative than smuggling contraband items, because human slaves can provide a source of long-term income through prostitution and forced labor. “There’s a market for cheap labor, and there’s a market for cheap sex, and traffickers know they can make money in it,” Michele Clark, co-director of the Protection Project, says.

— Kelly Field

<sup>1</sup> Department of Justice press release, Jan. 29, 2004.

<sup>2</sup> Department of Justice press release, March 2, 2004.

<sup>3</sup> Department of Justice, “Assessment of U.S. Activities to Combat Trafficking in Persons,” August 2003, p. 3.

<sup>4</sup> Amy O’Neill Richard, “International Trafficking in Women to the United States: A Contemporary Manifestation of Slavery and Organized Crime,” DCI Exceptional Intelligence Analyst Program, pp. 3-5.

<sup>5</sup> John R. Miller, “The United States’ Effort to Combat Trafficking in Persons,” International Information Program Electronic Journal, U.S. State Department, June 2003.

<sup>6</sup> Department of Justice, op. cit., August 2003, p. 9.

<sup>7</sup> Peter Landesman, “The Girls Next Door,” The New York Times Magazine, Jan. 25, 2004.

<sup>8</sup> Justice Department, op. cit., March 2, 2004.

<sup>9</sup> William Branigin, “A Life of Exhaustion, Beatings, and Isolation,” The Washington Post, Jan. 5, 1999, p. A6.

<sup>10</sup> Quoted in ibid.

<sup>11</sup> Richard, op. cit., p. 28.

<sup>12</sup> Janice G. Raymond and Donna M. Hughes, “Sex Trafficking of Women in the United States, International and Domestic Trends,” Coalition Against Trafficking in Women, March 2001, p. 52.

Slavery Goes Global

In the 15th century, European explorers and adventurers sailing to new territories in Asia, Africa and the Americas began a new chapter in the history of slavery.

By 1650, the Dutch, Spanish, Portuguese, French and English had established colonies throughout the world. The new territories, especially in the Americas, produced new crops such as sugar and tobacco, as well as gold and other minerals. Initially, enslaved indigenous peoples did the harvesting and mining in South America. But ill treatment and disease quickly decimated native populations, prompting the importation of slaves from Africa.

From the mid-1500s to the mid-1800s, almost 9 million Africans were shipped mostly to Latin America — particularly to today’s Brazil, Haiti and Cuba — under the most inhumane conditions. About 5 percent — about 400,000 — of all the African slaves ended up in the United States.<sup>25</sup>

On the sugar plantations of the West Indies and South America, crushing work and brutal punishment were the norm. Although Spain and Portugal had relatively liberal laws concerning the treatment of slaves — they could marry, sue a cruel owner and even buy their freedom — they were rarely enforced.

In the British colonies and later in the United States, slaves enjoyed somewhat better working conditions and medical care. Nonetheless, life was harsh and in some ways more difficult. Since slaves in Latin America and the Caribbean usually outnumbered Europeans, they were able to retain more of their African customs. In British America, where by 1750 whites outnumbered slaves by more than four to one, Africans quickly lost many of their cultural underpinnings.

Most American slavery was tied to the great Southern plantations that grew

Nearly 200 Million Young Kids Must Work

Nearly a fifth of the world's young children have to work, including 110 million in Asia and fully a quarter of all the children in sub-Saharan Africa.

Working Children, Ages 5 to 14, By Region

(in millions)

Region	Total Working	Percentage of children in region
Asia	110.4	18.7%
Latin America	16.5	17.0
North Africa, Middle East	9.0	10.2
Sub-Saharan Africa	37.9	25.3
Transitional countries*	8.3	14.6
Total	182.1	18.5%

* Transitional countries — such as Taiwan, Singapore and Malaysia — are no longer considered “developing” but not yet classified as fully industrialized.

Source: “Investing in Every Child,” International Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour, International Labour Office, December 2003

tobacco, rice and other cash crops. Although slavery also was practiced in Northern states, it was never as widespread and had been largely abolished by 1800.

By the late 18th century, Southern slavery also appeared headed for extinction, as industrialization and other trends took hold, rendering the plantation system increasingly economically unfeasible. But Eli Whitney's invention of the cotton gin in 1793 gave American slavery a new lease on life. The gin made the labor-intensive process of separating the seeds from the cotton easy, enabling slaves to dramatically increase their output.<sup>26</sup>

Meanwhile, the rise of textile mills in England and elsewhere was creating a new demand for the fluffy, white fiber. By the early 19th century, many Southern plantations that had been unprofitably growing other crops were now making plenty of money using slaves to pick and process cotton.

Around the same time, however, a movement to abolish slavery began to gather steam in the Northern states. For decades, Americans had debated the morality of slavery. During deliberations over independence in 1776, many delegates to the Second Continental Congress — including John Adams, Benjamin Franklin and Virginia slaveholder Thomas Jefferson — had pushed to make the elimination of slavery part of the movement for America's independence. But resistance from the South and the need for colonial unity against the British doomed the proposal.

The debate over slavery, however, did not go away. The issue complicated the new country's efforts to form its governing institutions and to expand westward, forcing increasingly abolitionist Northerners and slaveholding Southerners to craft tortured compromises to keep the nation together.

In 1789, delegates to the Constitutional Convention hammered out the infamous Three-fifths Compromise, permitting each slave to be counted as three-fifths of a person for purposes of apportioning the number of representatives each state had in the new Congress.<sup>27</sup> And in 1821, Congress passed the Missouri Compromise, drawing a line westward along the 36.30 parallel. The new Western states above the line would be admitted to the Union as “free” states, while those below the boundary would be so-called slave states.

Outlawing Slavery

Much of the rest of the world, however, was abolishing slavery. In the early 1800s, many of the newly independent nations of Spanish America won their independence and immediately outlawed human bondage. Simón Bolívar, who liberated much of Latin America, was a staunch abolitionist, calling slavery “the daughter of darkness.”<sup>28</sup>

In Europe, the tide also was turning. Largely due to the efforts of abolitionist William Wilberforce, the British Empire outlawed the practice in 1833, although de facto slavery continued in India and some other colonies. In 1848, France also freed the slaves in its colonies.

However, in the United States, peaceful efforts at compromise over slavery failed, and the issue finally helped trigger the Civil War in 1861. In 1863, during the height of the conflict, President Abraham Lincoln issued the “Emancipation Proclamation,” freeing all slaves in the Southern, or Confederate, states. Soon after the war ended with Union victory in 1865, the 13th Amendment to the Constitution abolished slavery altogether.<sup>29</sup>

After the Civil War, the worldwide abolition of slavery continued. Spain outlawed the practice in Puerto Rico in 1873 and in Cuba in 1886. More important, Brazil began dismantling its huge slave infrastructure in 1888.

Today, slavery is illegal in every country in the world and is outlawed by several treaties. "In international law, the outlawing of slavery has become what is called jus cogens, which means that it's completely accepted and doesn't need to be written into new treaties and conventions," says Bales of Free the Slaves.

The foundation of this complete acceptance rests on several groundbreaking international agreements, beginning with the 1926 Slavery Convention of the League of Nations, which required signatory countries to work to abolish every aspect of the practice.<sup>30</sup>

Slavery also is banned by the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which holds that "no one shall be held in slavery or servitude; slavery and the slave trade shall be prohibited in all their forms."<sup>31</sup>

Other conventions prohibiting the practice include the 1930 ILO Convention on Forced Labor and a 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery.

More recently, the United Nations in 2001 approved a Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish the Trafficking in Persons as part of a major convention on fighting organized crime. The protocol requires signatories to take action to fight trafficking and protect its victims. It has been signed by 117 countries and ratified by 45.<sup>32</sup> While the United States has not yet ratified the document, it has the support of the White House and is expected to win Senate approval in the near future. ■

Six-year-old Ratan Das breaks rocks at a construction site in Agartala, India, where he earns about 40 cents a day to supplement his widowed mother's 60-cents-per-day income. India has more child laborers than any other country — about 120 million — followed by Pakistan, Bangladesh, Indonesia and Brazil.

AFP Photo

says Pinata of Vital Voices. "Obviously, this could not have happened without the complicity between traffickers and the victims' families."

Parents sell their children for a variety of reasons — virtually all linked to poverty, Pinata says. "Some think the child will have a better life or that their daughter will be able to send money home," she says. "For some, it's just one less mouth to feed."

"Even when they have a sense of what their children will be doing, many parents feel they don't have a choice," adds UNICEF's Landgren. "They feel that literally anything is better than what they have now."

In Eastern Europe, traffickers often lure women into bondage by advertising in local newspapers for nanny positions in the United States or Western Europe. For instance, Tetiana, a Ukrainian woman, was offered 10 times her salary to be an au pair in Italy. Instead she was forced into prostitution in Istanbul, Turkey.<sup>33</sup>

Others are promised work as models or actresses. In some cases, the victims even put up their own money for their travel expenses, only to find themselves prisoners in a European brothel or in Mexico, awaiting transport across the border to the United States.<sup>34</sup>

Even those who understand at the outset that they are going to be prostitutes are not prepared for the brutality they face. "They're unaware of how much abuse, rape, psychological manipulation and coercion is involved," says the Polaris Project's Chon.

Eastern Europe is particularly fertile ground for sex traffickers, she says. The collapse of communism more than a decade ago has left many parts

CURRENT SITUATION

Human Trafficking

The poorest and most chaotic parts of the developing world supply most trafficking victims — often women and children destined for the sex trade.

In South Asia, young women and children routinely are abducted or lured from Nepal, Pakistan, India, Bangladesh, Cambodia and Myanmar (Burma) to work in brothels in India's large cities, notably Bombay, and the Persian Gulf states. Thousands also end up in Bangkok, Thailand's capital and an infamous sex-tourism mecca.

In Asia, the victims' own families often sell them to traffickers. "In Nepal, entire villages have been emptied of girls," of the region, especially Ukraine, Moldova and Belarus, economically and politically stunted. "These countries are just full of desperate people who will do anything for a chance at a better life," she says.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING AND SLAVERY

To make matters worse, brothel owners prize the region's many light-skinned, blonde women. "Lighter women are very popular in places like the United States, Europe and Asia," Chon says. "So these women are in demand."

In Africa, more people are trafficked for forced labor than as sex slaves. "In Africa, you have a lot of people being taken and sent to pick cotton and cocoa and other forms of agricultural labor," says Vital Voices' Pinata.

Regardless of their origin, once victims are lured into a trafficking ring, they quickly lose control over their destiny. "If they have a passport, it's usually taken from them and they're abused, physically and psychologically, in order to make them easier to control," says the United Methodist Committee On Relief's Beher.

When victims of trafficking reach their final destination, they rarely have freedom of any kind. "A 16-year-old girl who had been trafficked into Kosovo to be a prostitute told me that when she wasn't working in the bar, she was literally locked into her room and not allowed out," Beher says. "That's the sort of thing we see all the time."

Organized crime plays a key role in most human trafficking. "Most of what you are dealing with here is criminal networks," says Miller of the Office to Combat Trafficking. "You can't take someone out of the Czech Republic and drive her to the Netherlands and hand her over to another trafficker and then to a brothel without real cooperation."

Indeed, smuggling rings often team up with criminal groups in other countries or maintain "branch offices" there. And most traffickers are involved in other criminal activities, such as drugs and weapons smuggling. "Many drug gangs in Southeast Asia are spin-other illegal activities, this is very corrupting, especially in poor countries where the police are poorly paid."

In addition to stepping up law enforcement, countries can do many things to fight trafficking, UNICEF's Landgren says. "For example, the United Kingdom has a new system that keeps tabs on children entering the country," she says. "By keeping track of children that come in from abroad, we can better protect them."

And in Brazil, where landowners often lure peasants to their farms with promises of work only to put them in debt bondage, President Luiz Ignacio Lula da Silva has stepped up efforts to free forced laborers. Lula, as the president is called, also has called for a change in the constitution to allow the confiscation of land for those convicted of enslaving workers.

Even countries that have long allowed trafficking are beginning to address the issue. Moldova, for instance, has begun prosecuting traffickers and has created a database of employment agencies that help people find legitimate work abroad.<sup>35</sup>

NGOs have also taken steps to help. For instance, some groups run safe houses where trafficking victims who escape can find shelter and security. "We provide them with medical and psychological care," says Beher, whose group operates a house in Kosovo's capital, Pristina. "We allow them to stay until they recover and then help them to get home, which is usually somewhere else in Eastern Europe, like Romania or Moldova."

Continued on p. 290

A 16-year-old Cambodian girl rescued from a brothel peers from her hiding place in Phnom Penh. An estimated 300,000 women are trapped in slave-like conditions in the Southeast Asian sex trade. Cambodia recently agreed to join the first U.N. program aimed at halting the trafficking of women in the region.

AFP Photo/Rob Elliott

At Issue:

Is the Trafficking Victims Protection Act tough enough?

REP. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH, R-N.J.
CHAIRMAN, U.S. HELSINKI COMMISSION

WRITTEN FOR THE CQ RESEARCHER, MARCH 15, 2004

each year, nearly a million people worldwide are bought and sold into the commercial sex industry, sweatshops, domestic servitude and other dehumanizing situations.

In October 2000, President Clinton signed into law the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA), which I authored. It provided a multifaceted approach to halting human trafficking through law enforcement, prevention and aid to victims. It also represented two major policy changes: up to life in prison for those who traffic in humans and treatment of the people trafficked — largely women, children, and teenagers — as victims rather than as criminals. In 2003, the law was expanded and strengthened.

As President Bush noted in his historic speech at the United Nations in September 2003, the global community must do more to eradicate human slavery. But significant progress has been made in just a few years, thanks largely to the law's three-tier system and annual "Trafficking in Persons Report" mandated by the law.

When the first report came out, the State Department listed 23 nations in Tier 3 as the worst offenders. It pulled no punches and did not hesitate to name offending nations, including our allies, if they were not making "serious and sustained" efforts to fight trafficking. Naming names was a measure I fought hard to include in the law, even though it was initially opposed by the previous administration.

Thanks to the report and the threat of sanctions, most nations have improved their record on trafficking. Only 15 countries were in Tier 3 during the most recent 2003 report, and most of them made enough progress in the ensuing months to avoid economic sanctions. The State Department is continually improving the scope of the report so it will present the most accurate and thorough picture of the worldwide trafficking problem.

The message from the United States is loud and clear: If you are committed to the fight against human slavery, we welcome you as an ally. But if you continue to look askance when it comes to this horrible crime and pretend you don't have a trafficking problem, we're going to aggressively push you to make reforms, and we'll use economic sanctions as a means to that end.

TOMMY CALVERT, JR.
CHIEF OF EXTERNAL OPERATIONS,
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY GROUP

WRITTEN FOR THE CQ RESEARCHER, MARCH 15, 2004

most anti-slavery experts would agree the TVPA is a good law, but that slavery can be defeated in our lifetime only if we give the law priority in attention and funding — and apply it equally to friends and foes alike.

The "Trafficking in Person's Report" (TIPS) required by the law does not reveal the full story on global slavery, but only a snapshot. The criteria used to determine progress in the fight against slavery — by focusing on government action rather than on total slavery within a nation's borders — skew our view of realities on the ground.

South Korea, for example, has a serious problem with trafficking — an estimated 15,000 people trafficked per year — but it is ranked in Tier 1, the best ranking a government can receive. Nations can create many seemingly tough laws and programs to fight slavery. However, organized crime may still run thriving trafficking operations in the face of such policies, which may in reality be weak or ineffectual.

Last year marked the first time that countries designated by the "Trafficking In Persons Report" as the worst offenders — Tier 3 — would automatically be subject to U.S. sanctions, which can only be waived by the president.

The State Department gave wide latitude to the standards for Tier 2, perhaps to keep strategic allies from being hit with sanctions. Both Brazil and Saudi Arabia, for instance, received Tier 2 designations. But Brazil's president has launched one of the world's most ambitious plans to end slavery, while Saudi Arabia has no laws outlawing human trafficking and has prosecuted no offenders. Thus, the report's rankings equate a major national initiative to end slavery with royal lip service.

Some Middle Eastern and North African countries may have advanced in the rankings because they are being courted by the administration to support the war on terror and our plans for change in the region. But there is evidence these countries have not really progressed in the fight against human bondage.

The long-term effect of such discrepancies is to reduce the credibility of the report and lengthen the time it takes to eradicate slavery.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING AND SLAVERY

Continued from p. 288

The Polaris Project maintains three 24-hour hotlines (in English, Thai and Korean) in the United States to allow both victims and third parties to report trafficking activity. Polaris also has a trafficking database to help law enforcement and other officials gather information about potential cases.

But international organizations and NGOs can only do so much, says Behr, because impoverished, poorly governed countries will always be breeding grounds for trafficking. "Until the causes disappear, all we in the international aid community can do is fight the symptoms," she says.

"In order to really get rid of this problem," Behr continues, "you need political stability and a strong civil society, which in turn leads to the rule of law and stronger law enforcement. You know, there's a reason why there aren't a lot of Finnish people being trafficked."

But Calvert of the American Anti-Slavery Group says governments and international organizations could virtually shut down the trade in human beings if they wanted to. "The international community is in a state of denial and lacks the commitment to fight this," he says. "Look at Britain: They had whole fleets of ships devoted to stopping the slave trade on the high seas, and it worked."

Calvert says the United Nations and other international groups should be more aggressive and uncompromising in combating slavery. "They had weapons inspectors didn't they?" he asks. "Well that's what we need to fight this. We need that kind of action."

Pakistani Minister for Education Zobaida Jalal and U.S. Deputy Under Secretary of State Thomas Moorhead sign an agreement in Islamabad on Jan. 23, 2002, calling for the U.S. to provide $5 million to help educate working children in Pakistan.

AFP Photo/Saeed Khan

Callahan of Free the Slaves. "You don't pay off the principal of the loan, you just keep paying off the interest."

Bonded laborers work at jobs ranging from making bricks in Pakistan to farming, cigarette rolling and carpet making in India. In the western Indian state of Gujarat, some 30,000 bonded families harvest salt in the marshes. The glare from the salt makes them color-blind. When they die, the laborers cannot even be cremated, according to Hindu custom, because their bodies have absorbed too much salt to burn properly.<sup>37</sup>

Slavery is also widespread in sub-Saharan Africa, where the Anti-Slavery Group estimates that at least 200,000 people are in bondage. Besides Sudan, the largest concentration of African slaves is in Mauritania. For hundreds of years, Mauritania's lighter-skinned ruling elite kept their darker compatriots in a system of chattel slavery, with generations being born into servitude. Although the country formally outlawed slavery in 1980, the practice is thought to still be widespread.

"For the thousands of slaves who were legally freed in 1980, life did not change at all," Bales writes. "No one bothered to tell the slaves about it. Some have never learned of their legal freedom, some did so years later, and for most legal freedom was never translated into actual freedom." Today, slaves are still "everywhere" in Mauritania "doing every job that is hard, onerous and dirty."<sup>38</sup>

Slaves also pick cotton in Egypt and Benin, harvest cocoa and other crops in Ivory Coast and mine diamonds in Sierra Leone.

In addition, hundreds of youngsters are abducted each year and forced to become soldiers for rebel fighters in war zones like Uganda and Congo.

Slavery and Forced Labor

Slavery today bears little resemblance to earlier forms of bondage. For instance, 150 years ago in the American South, a healthy slave was a valuable piece of property, worth up to $40,000 in today's dollars, according to Free the Slaves.<sup>36</sup> By contrast, slaves today are often worth less than $100, giving slaveholders little incentive to care for them.

Although slavery exists nearly everywhere, it is most prevalent in the poorer parts of South Asia, where an estimated 15 million to 20 million people are in bonded labor in India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Nepal.

Bonded labor usually begins when someone borrows money from someone else and agrees to work for that person until the debt is paid. In most cases, the debt is never paid and the borrower and his immediate family become virtual slaves, working in exchange for basic amenities like food and shelter.

"Often you see a whole family in bondage for three or four generations because once someone borrows a small amount of money you're trapped," says

Child soldiers often are made to do horrible things. A girl in Uganda who was kidnapped at 13 was forced to kill and abduct other children during her five years in captivity.<sup>39</sup>

But slavery also flourishes beyond the developing world. Although the problem is not as widespread, forced labor and servitude also occur in Europe and the United States — in brothels, farms and sweatshops. “It’s amazing, but there are slaves in the United States doing all kinds of things,” says Miller of the Office to Combat Trafficking. “Recently authorities found a group of Mexican [agricultural workers] who had been trafficked to work for no pay in Florida. It’s unbelievable.”

Moreover, slavery is not confined to just seedy brothels or plantations. In upscale American neighborhoods too, people, usually from other countries, have been enslaved, often as domestics. Last year, for instance, a suburban Maryland couple was convicted of forced labor for coercing an illegal alien from Ghana to work seven days a week as a domestic servant without pay. And from time to time, foreign diplomats are found to be harboring unpaid domestic workers from their home countries who cannot leave to work for someone else because the diplomats hold their visas.<sup>40</sup> ■

OUTLOOK

Impact of Globalization

The increasing ease of travel and communication brought about by globalization has helped many industries, including illegal ones like trafficking and slavery.

“Globalization has certainly made trafficking and slavery easier, but it is a double-edged sword,” says Jacobson of Christian Freedom International. “It has also helped us to more quickly and effectively shine a spotlight on the evil thugs who are doing these bad things.”

Moreover, Jacobson says, as globalization improves the general standard of living in the developing world, it becomes harder for traffickers to prey on innocents. “When the boats are rising for everyone, poverty and despair are alleviated,” he says. “When someone gets a job and education and health care, they are much less susceptible to being abused.”

The Polaris Project’s Chon is also optimistic, although for different reasons. “I’m very upbeat about all of this, because tackling these problems is a matter of political will, and I think the world is slowly beginning to pay more attention to these issues,” she says. “I feel as though we’re at the same point as the [American] abolitionist movement at the beginning of the 19th century, in that things are slowly beginning to move in the right direction.”

Rep. Smith agrees. “There’s a fever all over the world to enact new, tough policies to deal with this,” he says. “Because the U.S. is out front on this, a lot of countries are beginning to follow suit.”

Moreover, the optimists note, victims themselves are increasingly fighting for their rights. “There is a silent revolution going on right now, in places like India, where people are literally freeing themselves from slavery,” says Callahan of Free the Slaves, referring to thousands of quarry slaves in northern India who recently have left their bondage and begun new lives. “If this kind of thing keeps up, in a few decades these problems will be blips on the radar screen compared to what they are today.”

But Beher of the United Methodist Committee on Relief sees little change ahead because of continuing poverty and societal dysfunction. “The problems that lead to trafficking and slavery are very complicated, and there are no easy fixes,” she says. “We need to build up the economies and the civil society of the places where these things happen in order to get rid of this once and for all. And I’m afraid that that is going to take many decades.”

Indeed, “Things could get a lot worse before they get better,” warns Young of the Women’s Commission for Refugee Women and Children, comparing trafficking to the drug trade.

“It’s so profitable, and there is so little risk in getting caught that it seems like there will be plenty of this kind of thing going on for the foreseeable future.” ■

Notes

<sup>1</sup> See www.freetheslaves.net/slavery\_today/index.html.

<sup>2</sup> Figure cited in “2003 Trafficking in Persons Report,” U.S. Department of State, p. 7.

<sup>3</sup> Frank Trejo, “Event Underscores Scope, Toll of Human Trafficking,” Dallas Morning News, March 4, 2003, p. 3B.

<sup>4</sup> Richard Mertens, “Smuggler’s Prey: Poor Women of Eastern Europe,” The Christian Science Monitor, Sept. 22, 2002, p. A7.

<sup>5</sup> Quoted in ibid.

<sup>6</sup> “Trafficking in Persons Report,” op. cit., p. 6.

<sup>7</sup> The entire text of President Bush’s speech can be found at www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2003/09/20030923-4.html.

About the Author

David Masci specializes in science, religion and foreign-policy issues. Before joining The CQ Researcher in 1996, he was a reporter at Congressional Quarterly’s Daily Monitor and CQ Weekly. He holds a law degree from The George Washington University and a B.A. in medieval history from Syracuse University. His recent reports include “Rebuilding Iraq” and “Torture.”

<sup>8</sup> "IPEC Action Against Child Labour: 2002-2003," International Labour Organization, January 2004, p. 15; see also ILO, "Investing in Every Child," December 2003, p. 32.

<sup>9</sup> Figure cited in Davan Maharaj, "Panel Frowns on Efforts to Buy Sudan Slaves' Freedom," Los Angeles Times, May 28, 2002, p. A3.

<sup>10</sup> Quoted from "60 Minutes II," May 15, 2002.

<sup>11</sup> Nicholas D. Kristof, "Bargaining For Freedom," The New York Times, Jan 21, 2004, p. A27.

<sup>12</sup> Figure cited at "UNICEF Oral Report on the Global Challenge of Child Trafficking," January 2004, at: www.unicef.org/about/TraffickingOralreport.pdf.

<sup>13</sup> Full text of the law is at: www.state.gov/documents/organization/10492.pdf. The law was reauthorized in December 2003.

<sup>14</sup> Figures cited at www.state.gov/g/tip/rls/fs/28548.htm.

<sup>15</sup> Richard Mertens, "In Turkey, Childhoods Vanish in Weary Harvests," The Christian Science Monitor, May 8, 2003, p. 7.

<sup>16</sup> ILO, op. cit.

<sup>17</sup> See Brian Hansen, "Children in Crisis," The CQ Researcher, Aug. 31, 2001, p. 657.

<sup>18</sup> See: www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/ipcc/ratify\_govern.pdf.

<sup>19</sup> ILO, op. cit., January 2004, p. 37.

<sup>20</sup> "With a Little U.S. Help, ILO Targets Child Labour," Indian Express, March 3, 2004.

<sup>21</sup> Hugh Thomas, World History: The Story of Mankind from Prehistory to the Present (1996), pp. 54-55.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid., pp. 105-107.

<sup>23</sup> Quoted in Michael Grant, The World of Rome (1960), p. 116.

<sup>24</sup> Thomas, op. cit., pp. 107-110.

<sup>25</sup> Figures cited in ibid., p. 279.

<sup>26</sup> John Hope Franklin and Alfred A. Moss, Jr., From Slavery to Freedom: A History of African-Americans (2000), p. 100.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid., p. 94.

<sup>28</sup> From a speech before the Congress of Angostura in 1819. See <http://www.fordham.edu/halsall/mod/1819bolivar.html>.

<sup>29</sup> Franklin and Moss, op. cit., p. 244.

<sup>30</sup> The full text of the convention can be found at www.unicri.it/1926%20slavery%20convention.pdf.

<sup>31</sup> Quoted at www.un.org/Overview/rights.html.

<sup>32</sup> A complete list of those countries that have signed and ratified the protocol are at www.unodc.org/unodc/en/crime\_cicp\_signatures\_trafficking.html.

<sup>33</sup> Sylvie Briand, "Sold into Slavery: Ukrainian Girls Tricked into Sex Trade," Agence

FOR MORE INFORMATION

American Anti-Slavery Group, 198 Tremont St., Suite 421, Boston, MA 02116; (800) 884-0719; www.iabolish.com.

Casa Alianza, 346 West 17th St., New York, N.Y. 10011; (212) 727-4000; www.casa-alianza.org. A San Jose, Costa Rica, group that aids street children in Latin America.

Christian Children's Fund, 2821 Emerywood Parkway, Richmond, VA 23294; (800) 776-6767; www.christianchildrensfund.org. CCF works in 28 countries on critical children's issues.

Christian Freedom International, P.O. Box 535, Front Royal, VA 22630; (800) 323-CARE (2273); (540) 636-8907; www.christianfreedom.org. An interdenominational human rights organization that combines advocacy with humanitarian assistance for persecuted Christians.

Christian Solidarity International, Zelglistrasse 64, CH-8122 Binz, Zurich, Switzerland; www.csi-int.ch/index.html. Works to redeem slaves in Sudan.

Defence for Children International, P.O. Box 88, CH 1211, Geneva 20, Switzerland; (+41 22) 734-0558; www.defence-for-children.org. Investigates sexual exploitation of children and other abuses.

Free the Children, 1750 Steeles Ave. West, Suite 218, Concord, Ontario, Canada L4K 2L7; (905) 760-9382; www.freethechildren.org. This group encourages youth to help exploited children.

Free the Slaves, 1326 14th St., N.W., Washington, DC 20005; (202) 588-1865; www.freetheslaves.net.

Human Rights Watch, 350 Fifth Ave., New York, NY 10118; (212) 290-4700; www.hrw.org. Investigates abuses worldwide.

International Labour Organization, 4, route des Morillons, CH-1211, Geneva 22, Switzerland; www.ilo.org. Sets and enforces worldwide labor standards.

Polaris Project, P.O. Box 77892, Washington, DC 20013; (202) 547-7990; www.polarisproject.org. Grass-roots organization fighting trafficking.

United Methodist Committee on Relief, 475 Riverside Dr., New York, NY 10115; (800) 554-8583; gbgm-umc.org. Worldwide humanitarian group.

United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), 3 United Nations Plaza, New York, NY 10017; (212) 326-7000; www.unicef.org. Helps poor children in 160 countries.

Women's Commission on Refugee Women and Children, 122 East 42nd St., 12th Floor, New York, NY 10168-1289; (212) 551-3088; www.womenscommission.org. Aids trafficking victims in the developing world.

World Vision International, 800 West Chestnut Ave., Monrovia, Calif. 91016; (626) 303-8811; www.wvi.org. A Christian relief and development organization established in 1950.

France Presse, Jan. 28, 2004.

<sup>34</sup> Peter Landesman, "The Girls Next Door," The New York Times Magazine, Jan. 25, 2004, p. 30.

<sup>35</sup> "Trafficking in Person's Report," op. cit., p. 107.

<sup>36</sup> See www.freetheslaves.net/slavery\_today/index.html.

<sup>37</sup> Christopher Kremmer, "With a Handful of Salt," The Boston Globe, Nov. 28, 1999.

<sup>38</sup> Kevin Bales, Disposable People: The New Slavery in the Global Economy (1999), p. 81.

<sup>39</sup> Thomas Wagner, "Study Documents Trauma of Child Soldiers," Associated Press Online, March 11, 2004.

<sup>40</sup> Ruben Castaneda, "Couple Enslaved Woman," The Washington Post, June 10, 2003, p. B1.

Bibliography

---

Selected Sources

Books

Bales, Kevin, Disposable People: New Slavery in the Global Economy, University of California Press, 1999.

The president of Free the Slaves and a leading expert on slavery offers strategies to end the practice.

Bok, Francis, Escape From Slavery: The True Story of My Ten Years In Captivity and My Journey to Freedom in America, St. Martin's Press, 2003.

A former slave in Sudan tells the gripping story of his ordeal and eventual journey to the United States.

Franklin, John Hope, and, Alfred Moss Jr., From Slavery to Freedom: A History of African Americans, McGraw-Hill, 2000.

Franklin, a renowned professor emeritus of history at Duke University and Moss, an associate professor at the University of Maryland, discuss the slave trade and slavery in the United States up to the Civil War.

Articles

"A Cargo of Exploitable Souls," The Economist, June 1, 2002.

The article examines human trafficking of prostitutes and forced laborers into the United States.

Bales, Kevin, "The Social Psychology of Modern Slavery," Scientific American, April 2002, p. 68.

A leading expert on slavery examines the psychological underpinnings that may drive both traffickers and slaveholders as well as their victims.

Cockburn, Andrew, "Hidden in Plain Sight: The World's 27 Million Slaves," National Geographic, Sept. 2003, p. 2.

A correspondent for London's Independent takes a hard look at slavery; includes chilling photographs of victims.

Hansen, Brian, "Children in Crisis," The CQ Researcher, Aug. 31, 2001, pp. 657-688.

Hansen examines the exploitation of children around the world, including sexual slaves and forced laborers.

Kristof, Nicolas D., "Bargaining For Freedom," The New York Times, Jan. 21, 2004, p. A27.

The veteran columnist describes how he "bought" and freed two sex slaves in Cambodia. The article is part of Kristof's series on his experiences in Southeast Asia.

Landesman, Peter, "The Girls Next Door," The New York Times Magazine, Jan. 25, 2004, p. 30.

Landesman's detailed exposé of trafficking focuses on the importation of young girls into the U.S. for prostitution.

Maharaj, Davan, "Panel Frowns on Efforts to Buy Sudan Slaves Freedom," Los Angeles Times, May 28, 2002, p. 3.

The article details the controversy surrounding the practice of slave redemption in Sudan.

Mertens, Richard, "Smugglers' Prey: Poor Women of Eastern Europe," The Christian Science Monitor, Sept. 25, 2002, p. 7.

The article examines the plight of Eastern European women trafficked into sexual slavery who manage to escape.

Miller, John, R., "Slavery in 2004," The Washington Post, Jan. 1, 2004, p. A25.

The director of the State Department's Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons argues that the Trafficking Victims Protection Act has prodded other countries to act.

Power, Carla, et al., "Preying on Children," Newsweek, Nov. 17, 2003, p. 34.

The number of children being trafficked into Western Europe is rising, helped by more porous borders and the demand for young prostitutes.

Vaknin, Sam, "The Morality of Child Labor," United Press International, Oct. 4, 2002.

UPI's senior business correspondent argues that organizations opposed to most forms of child labor impose unrealistic, rich-world standards on the poorest countries.

Reports

"Investing in Every Child: An Economic Study of the Costs and Benefits of Eliminating Child Labor," International Labour Organization, December 2003.

The ILO contends that ending child labor would improve economic growth in the developing world.

"IPEC Action Against Child Labor: 2002-2003," International Labour Organization, January 2004.

The report charts the progress made by the ILO's International Program on the Elimination of Child Labor (IPEC), which funds anti-child labor initiatives around the world.

"Trafficking in Persons Report," U.S. Department of State, June 2003.

The annual report required by the Trafficking Victims Protection Act assesses global anti-trafficking efforts.

The Next Step:

Additional Articles from Current Periodicals

Children

Byrne, Eileen, "Morocco Wants Children Out of Workshops and Into School," Los Angeles Times, Dec. 29, 2002, p. A18.

Children as young as seven earn a dollar a day working a six-day week; intense poverty means laws against child labor go unenforced.

Iritani, Evelyn, "Child Labor Rules Don't Ease Burden in Bangladesh," Los Angeles Times, May 4, 2003, p. C1.

Critics of an agreement with Bangladesh to eliminate child labor in garment factories say many children end up in more dangerous jobs.

Kirk, Danica, "Albania Told to Halt Trade of Children," The Washington Post, Dec. 7, 2003, p. A27.

In a country so poor government aid sometimes arrives by horse-drawn cart, child trafficking is a low priority for the Albanian government.

McKelvey, Tara, "The Youngest Soldiers," Chicago Tribune, May 26, 2003, Tempo Section, p. 1.

A surplus of small arms and a shortage of adults in populations ravaged by war resulted in a surge in the number of child soldiers, up to 300,000 globally.

Power, Carla, "Preying on Children," Newsweek, Nov. 17, 2003, p. 34.

Poor economic conditions in Eastern Europe and Africa combine with fractured and sometimes hurtful laws to fuel an increase in European child trafficking.

Sengupta, Somini, "Child Traffickers Prey on Bangladesh," The New York Times, April 29, 2002, p. A6.

Thousands of Bangladeshi children are trafficked abroad each year; many boys serve as camel jockeys in the Persian Gulf.

Government Policies

Allen, Mike, "Bush Warns U.N. Assembly About Dangers of Trade in Sex Slaves," The Washington Post, Sept. 24, 2003, p. A23.

President Bush for the first time mentioned the fight against human trafficking when he addressed the General Assembly.

Branigin, William, "Va. Aid Group Helps Victims of Human Trade," The Washington Post, March 6, 2003, p. B8.

Boat People SOS aids people like Quang Thi Vo, a Vietnamese woman who worked as a virtual slave in a Korean-owned factory in American Samoa.

Continetti, Matthew, "On Human Bondage," The Weekly Standard, Oct. 6, 2003.

President Bush's comments to the U.N. urging the fight against human trafficking are mirrored by more aggressive U.S. prosecution of traffickers.

Finley, Bruce, "Human Rights Color Trade Debate," The Denver Post, April 22, 2002, p. A1.

A proposal to grant President Bush increased authority to reach trade agreements is influenced by slave-labor concerns in Myanmar and elsewhere.

Haugen, Gary, "State's Blind Eye on Sexual Slavery," The Washington Post, June 15, 2002, p. A23.

The author argues that the annual "Trafficking in Persons Report" by the Department of State gives a passing grade to many countries where sex trafficking is unpunished.

McKenzie, Glenn, "Nigeria Targets Traffickers Who Exploit Children," Chicago Tribune, Oct. 26, 2003, News Section, p. 4.

Operations in Nigeria aim to free children and teens who labor in granite quarries for 20 cents a day.

Miller, John, "Slavery in 2004," The Washington Post, Jan. 1, 2004, p. A25.

The director of the State Department's anti-trafficking section describes how the threat of economic penalties can motivate countries to fight slavery and forced labor.

Sex Trade

Binder, David, "In Europe, Sex Slavery Is Thriving Despite Raids," The New York Times, Oct. 20, 2002, p. A8.

A U.S.-funded, multinational anti-trafficking operation in Europe had mixed results.

Faiola, Anthony, "N. Korean Women Find Life of Abuse Waiting in China," The Washington Post, March 3, 2004, p. A20.

Female North Korean refugees are regularly forced into sexual servitude in China; their captors threaten them with deportation back to North Korea, where a worse fate awaits.

Macintyre, Donald, "Base Instincts," Time Asia, Aug. 12, 2002, p. 18.

Members of Congress demand action to address concerns U.S. troops frequent Korean bars and clubs staffed by women trafficked from the Philippines and Russia.

Mertens, Richard, "Smugglers' Prey: Poor Women of E. Europe," The Christian Science Monitor, Sept. 25, 2002, p. 7.

Peacekeepers and international police forces in Bosnia and Kosovo formed the core customers of traffickers who bought and sold women like cattle.

Montlake, Simon, "In Thailand, a Struggle to Halt Human Trafficking," The Christian Science Monitor, Aug. 29, 2003, p. 9.

Poverty and exploitation are more common elements in Thai prostitution than outright coercion; some Burmese women return to the brothels voluntarily.

Sulavik, Christopher, "Facing Down Traffickers," Newsweek, Aug. 25, 2003, p. 27.

The poverty accompanying the collapse of the Soviet Union made it relatively easy to exploit desperate, young women from impoverished former Soviet satellites.

Situation in America

"A Cargo of Exploitable Souls," The Economist, June 1, 2002.

The State Department estimates that every year approximately 50,000 people are forcibly trafficked into the United States.

Lochhead, Carolyn, "Sex Trade Uses Bay Area to Bring in Women, Kids," San Francisco Chronicle, Feb. 26, 2003, p. A3.

Trafficking is a bigger problem on the West Coast because of better access from Asia and Mexico.

O'Connor, Anne-Marie, "Gathering Fights Those Who Deal in Human Lives," Los Angeles Times, Aug. 25, 2002, p. B10.

Police, human rights activists and social workers from the U.S. and Mexico discussed ways to fight the international sex trade.

Roche, Walter, and Willoughby Mariano, "Trapped in Servitude Far From Their Homes," The Baltimore Sun, Sept. 15, 2002, p. 1A.

Micronesians and Marshall Islanders are brought to the United States on false pretenses and forced to labor in virtual servitude for minimal pay.

Wallace, Bill, and Jim Herron Zamora, "Sex Trafficking Ruthless, Lucrative," San Francisco Chronicle, Jan. 24, 2004, p. A1.

Raids on San Francisco brothels highlight the nation's $9 billion-a-year trade in human flesh; lured by profit, new operators spring up overnight.

Sudan

"A Modern Tale of Slavery, Survival, and Escape," The Christian Science Monitor, Dec. 19, 2003, p. 11.

Excerpts are presented from a book by a young Sudanese boy who was captured by northern militiamen and spent 10 years as a slave.

Kristof, Nicholas, "A Slave's Journey in Sudan," The New York Times, April 23, 2002, p. A23.

Applying pressure on the Sudanese government and engaging them rather than applying sanctions is the most effective means to fight slavery.

Lacey, Marc, "Panel Led by U.S. Criticizes Sudan's Government Over Slavery," The New York Times, May 23, 2002, p. A17.

A multinational commission formed by the United States condemned Sudan for allowing slavery to flourish.

Maharaj, Davan, "Panel Frowns on Efforts to Buy Sudan Slaves' Freedom," Los Angeles Times, May 28, 2002, p. A3.

A U.S.-led commission on slavery in Sudan discourages the buying back of slaves because the money provides an incentive for taking more slaves.

Martin, Randolph, "Sudan's Perfect War," Foreign Affairs, March/April 2002, p. 111.

The story of Sudan's endless war is a confluence of tribal enmities, religious fanaticism, political opportunism and access to oil.

CITING THE CQ RESEARCHER

Sample formats for citing these reports in a bibliography include the ones listed below. Preferred styles and formats vary, so please check with your instructor or professor.

MLA STYLE

Jost, Kenneth. "Rethinking the Death Penalty." The CQ Researcher 16 Nov. 2001: 945-68.

APA STYLE

Jost, K. (2001, November 16). Rethinking the death penalty. The CQ Researcher, 11, 945-968.

CHICAGO STYLE

Jost, Kenneth. "Rethinking the Death Penalty." CQ Researcher, November 16, 2001, 945-968.

Back Issues

The CQ Researcher offers in-depth coverage of many key areas.

Back issues are $10. Quantity discounts available.

Call (866) 427-7737 to order back issues.

Or call for a free CQ Researcher Web trial!

Online access provides:

- Searchable archives dating back to 1991.
- PDF files for downloading and printing.
- Wider access through IP authentication.
- Availability 48 hours before print version.

CIVIL LIBERTIES

Race in America, July 2003
Gay Marriage, September 2003
Civil Liberties Debates, October 2003

CRIME/LAW

Cyber-Crime, April 2002
Corporate Crime, October 2002
Serial Killers, October 2003

ECONOMY

State Budget Crises, October 2003
Stock Market Troubles, January 2004
Exporting Jobs, February 2004

EDUCATION

Home Schooling Debate, January 2003
Combating Plagiarism, September 2003
Black Colleges, December 2003

ENERGY/TRANSPORTATION

Future of the Airline Industry, June 2002
Future of Amtrak, October 2002
SUV Debate, May 2003

ENVIRONMENT

Crisis in the Plains, May 2003
Water Shortages, August 2003
Air Pollution Conflict, November 2003

HEALTH AND SAFETY

Medicare Reform, August 2003
Women's Health, November 2003
Homeopathy Debate, December 2003

POLITICS AND PUBLIC POLICY

Abortion Debates, March 2003
State Budget Crises, October 2003
Democracy in the Arab World, January 2004

SOCIAL TRENDS

Latinos' Future, October 2003
Future of the Music Industry, Nov. 2003

TECHNOLOGY

NASA's Future, May 2003

TERRORISM/DEFENSE

Homeland Security, September 2003
North Korean Crisis, April 2003

WORLD AFFAIRS

Trouble in South America, March 2003
Rebuilding Iraq, July 2003
Aiding Africa, August 2003

YOUTH

Sexual Abuse and the Clergy, May 2002
Movie Ratings, March 2003
Hazing, January 2004
Youth Suicide, February 2004
Reforming Big-Time College Sports, March 2004

Future Topics

► Nuclear Proliferation

► Broadcast Indecency

► Anniversary of Desegregation

CQ Researcher Favorites in a Durable, Circulating Volume

The CQ Researcher provides reliable and complete background information and analysis on timely topics. Now that value is conveniently packaged in single-issue books for research and circulation. The CQ Researcher Books Set includes: CQ Researcher on Teens in America, CQ Researcher on Controversies in Law and Society, CQ Researcher on Controversies in Medicine and Science and CQ Researcher on Saving the Environment.

Set of 4 • Hardbound • ISBN 1-56802-693-5 • $100.00

TO PLACE AN ORDER

Call Toll-Free: 866.4CQ-PRESS • Fax: 800.380.3810

Web: www.cqpress.com • E-mail: customerservice@cqpress.com